SECRET EXCISE

I went to see the Chancellor to ask [redacted] whether he would welcome a visit from the Secretary on Saturday. His answer was enthusiastically affirmative. I telephoned Dave Zellerbach in Rome to coordinate the announcement of the Secretary's visit here with that of Fanfani's trip to Washington next week. Fanfani [redacted] accepted this morning. The circuit was completed when Jerry Greene called me from Washington, so everything seems set.

Veli Helenius, the new Finnish trade representative, called on me. In conversation with the Chancellor he spoke of the UAR Ambassador's visit to him and of how he [redacted] denounced Dulles. Zeine-Eddine is a Druse; Harold Hoskins has known him for years and considers him [redacted] clever. He tried to lead the Chancellor to believe that the ambition of Nasser is to have a neutralized Middle East, dependent neither on the USSR or the Western nations. Adenauer is inclined to share this view.

Kit Steel telephoned me this morning; a British report from Frank Roberts [redacted] informed him that Spaak was coming to see the Chancellor tomorrow [redacted]
